Gian-Carlo Menotti's "musical drama" The Consul has been received with great acclaim. The New Yorker's critic, hardly noted for unrestrained enthusiasm, speaks of a "history-making accomplishment" and hails the work as Broadway's "first successful all-out opera." The warmth and enthusiasm of this ovation demonstrate the eagerness of America, the Occident of the 20th century, to catch up with the European continent in every field of culture—even opera.

Menotti's most famous and perhaps most performed work is Amahl and the Night Visitors. This 1960 production shows why The Consul deserves to be performed more, the music is so beautiful and there is a real emotional wallop, so much so that the predictability of the story can be totally ignored. And this performance is astounding.
