Richard Southern's The Making of the Middle Ages is a remarkably good book. I decided to read it after learning in Norman Cantor's Inventing the Middle Ages that Cantor considers it one of the two greatest books on medieval history written in the 20th century, and possibly the most influential.

The Making of the Middle Sea: A History of the Mediterranean from the Beginning to the Emergence of the Classical World. The Mediterranean has been for millennia one of the global cockpits of human endeavor. World-class interpretations exist of its Classical and subsequent history, but there has been remarkably little holistic exploration of how its societies, culture and economies first came into being, despite the fact that almost all the fundamental developments originated well before 500.
